instructional level.

ABOUT THE WORKSHOP

This workshop will consider ways in which narcissistic concerns may infuse personality.

It will touch on both the more arrogant presentations of narcissistic personality disorder (e.g., as described in the DSM) and the extensive literature on converse versions of narcissistic preoccupation (“covert,” “depressed-depleted,” “hypervigilant,” or “closet” narcissism, as depicted in the Psychodynamic Diagnostic Manual).

Dr. McWilliams will discuss the range of narcissism from healthy to seriously disturbed presentations (Kernberg’s “malignant narcissism”), putting emphasis on the dangers that malignant narcissism poses to personal relationships, family connections, workplace and institutional functioning, and political processes.

Clinical implications of pathological narcissistic presentations will be explored.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Discriminate descriptive and categorical psychiatric diagnoses from more inferential and categorical diagnostic formulations.
2. Describe the evidence from both clinical experience and empirical research supporting the conceptualization of psychopathology and personality organization along a continuum from relative health to extreme disturbance.
3. Construe narcissistic and psychopathic psychologies in terms of underlying themes rather than observable, present-versus-absent traits.
4. Account for some of the difficulties that the DSM-5 work group on Personality Disorders had in conceptualizing Narcissistic Personality Disorder.
5. Describe the continuum from normal narcissistic preoccupations through malignant narcissism to frank psychopathy and the DSM’s Antisocial Personality Disorder.
6. Describe how issues of socioeconomic and political trends, gender, sexual orientation, culture, ethnicity, and religious background may affect the diagnosis and treatment of putatively narcissistic disorders.
7. Delineate at least two potential therapeutic approaches to the treatment of malignant narcissism.
